ONE DAY WORKSHOP FRESHWATER BIODIVERSITY AND CONSERVATION REPORT

Venue: Dept of Zoology

Date: 08.12.23

The Department of Zoology, in collaboration with Life Trust Coimbatore a MoU-signed organization, orchestrated a transformative one-day workshop centered on freshwater biodiversity and conservation for B.Sc, Zoology students. The workshop held on 08.12.23 in the Department of Zoology, was a comprehensive exploration of the critical issues affecting freshwater ecosystems and the imperative need for conservation measures.

Introduction: The inaugural session set the tone for the day, with the Principal Dr.Sasikanta Dash and Dr. S. Nagaraj, Head of the Department delivering opening remarks and a resource person providing a warm welcome. The workshop's objectives were clearly outlined, emphasizing the significance of freshwater ecosystems in the broader context of biodiversity.

Agenda: Session 1: Basics of Freshwater Biodiversity

The renowned speaker took the stage, delving into the intricacies of freshwater biodiversity. The audience was treated to insightful lectures covering the ecological roles of common species and the interconnectedness of these organisms within the ecosystem.

Session 2: Threats to Freshwater Ecosystems

The second session addressed the looming threats to freshwater ecosystems with a special focus on the Western Ghats biodiversity hotspot. Discussions ranged from the insidious effects of pollution to the devastating impacts of habitat destruction and the overarching influence of climate change. Real-world case studies illuminated the severity of these challenges, emphasizing the urgent need for conservation efforts.

Session 3: Conservation Strategies

Following an eye-opening examination of the threats, the workshop shifted focus to potential solutions. Presentations showcased successful conservation projects, offering hope and inspiration. Engaging in group activities allowed students to actively contribute ideas and innovative strategies for the conservation of freshwater biodiversity.

Activity-Based Learning: Theoretical knowledge gained traction as students embarked on the activity-based learning on hotspots and Western Ghats habitats. This practical exposure provided a tangible connection to the concepts discussed earlier in the day. Students honed their field research techniques and learned firsthand about the delicate balance of these ecosystems.

Feedback and Interaction: An open forum allowed participants to share their insights and pose questions to a panel comprising speakers, faculty, and students. The dynamic exchange of ideas and experiences enriched the learning environment, fostering a sense of shared responsibility for freshwater conservation.

Conclusion: The workshop culminated with a renewed commitment to freshwater biodiversity conservation. The MoU signed organization stands as a testament to the establishment of a long-term partnership, ensuring sustained collaboration between the academic institution and the NGO. Participant certificates were issued and they expressed their gratitude for the informative sessions and the invaluable practical experiences gained throughout the day. The programme was coordinated by Dr. R. Karthikeyani, with assistance from Dr. D. Vasantharaja, Dr. D. Sandhia and Dr. S. Irissappan.
